The earlier you call, the more options you have.

> Early advice is recommended whether a business is seeking a way to survive or closing the business down. Addressing the situation early provides more options to directors to protect not only the company, its creditors and employees but also the personal position of the directors.

> HAYLEY MADDISON, DIRECTOR

Most people we speak to have been worrying about it for far longer than they needed to.

Talking to us costs nothing, commits you to nothing, and goes no further. It may even be unnecessary to enter into a formal procedure at all - it is often possible for us to negotiate directly with creditors and avoid the publicity and restrictions that come with one.

We will always act in our clients' best interests, and can objectively advise whether there is a way for the business to survive or whether it is better to wind things down with care. Either way, we will guide you through the process in a friendly, sensitive and confidential manner - to provide clarity and put your mind at rest during what can be troubling and uncertain times.

What happens when you call

A free, confidential, no obligation initial consultation, where we review your situation and advise on a solution tailored specifically to your needs.

You will only ever be dealing with a qualified team. We provide practical solutions, efficiently and quickly.

If the business can be saved

Company Voluntary Arrangement

A deal with all of your creditors, and an alternative to liquidation. You remain in office as a director throughout.

Administration

An Insolvency Practitioner is put in place by the court. All action against the company stops immediately, and the business can keep trading whilst a buyer is found.

Informal arrangement

Repayment terms, refinancing or investment agreed with creditors, with none of the publicity or restrictions of a formal procedure.

Individual Voluntary Arrangement

For sole traders and individuals, a deal with all of your creditors as an alternative to bankruptcy. Your home can in many cases be excluded.

Where an arrangement works, it tends to work for everyone

- It costs less than a liquidation.
- The company survives and the directors continue in office.
- Creditors receive higher dividends.
- Employees' jobs are protected.

If it cannot

We will advise on the steps necessary to wind the company up, and make sure the correct steps are taken - with specific regard to your responsibilities as a director during what can be difficult and trying times.

The team who will be there for you

With over 50 years of experience, Maidment Judd can guide you through the legal maze with a friendly and approachable team of dedicated professionals. Our size allows us to provide not just a personal service, but the flexibility to meet whatever your situation demands.
